The sympathetic nervous system also has tracts that innervate the S-A and A-V nodes, along with other areas within the atria and ventricles. These nerves secrete norepinephrine, which causes the heart to speed up and increase the force of its contractions. The cardiac center of the medulla controls the impulses from the parasympathetic and sympathetic nerves by interpreting information from Recurrence of sarcoidosis in a cardiac allograft: Control ...

Sarcoidosis of the heart is an unusual but previously reported indication for heart transplantation. It is clear that sarcoidosis is a systemic disease, but in spite of this, recurrence in the cardiac allograft has not been previously noted.

Anterior cruciate ligament reconstruction best practice: A ...

There is much literature about differing grafts used in anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) reconstruction. Much of this is of poor quality and of a low evidence base. We review and summarise the literature looking at the four main classes of grafts used in ACL reconstruction: bone-patella tendon-bone
