CTLA-4 in autoimmune diseases a general susceptibility ...

In this review, we critically evaluate the evidence for pathogenetical involvement of CTLA-4 in the different autoimmune diseases with focus on the possible role of genetic variation of the CTLA4

CTLA-4; a negative regulator of autoimmune disease CTLA-4, a CD28 homologue expressed on activated T cells, binds with high affinity to the CD28 ligands, B7-1 (CD80) and B7-2 (CD86). This study was designed to examine the role of CTLA-4 in regulating autoimmune disease. Murine relapsing-remitting experimental autoimmune encephalomyelitis (R-EAE) is a demyelinating disease mediated by PLP139-151-specific CD4+ T cells in SJL/J mice. Anti-CTLA-4 mAbs (or their Fab) fragments) enhanced in vitro proliferation and pro-inflammatory

The soluble CTLA-4 receptor and its role in autoimmune ...

Abstract. CTLA-4, initially described as a membranebound molecule, is a costimulatory receptor transducing a potent inhibitory signal. Increasing evidence shows the CTLA-4 gene to be an important susceptibility locus for autoimmune endocrinopathies and other autoimmune disorders.

A CTLA 4 gene polymorphism is associated with both Graves ...

CONCLUSIONSThese results confirm that the CTLA 4 gene, or one closely associated with it, confers susceptibility to Grave's disease but is not specific as the CTLA 4 106 allele is also associated with autoimmune hypothyroidism. This association seems to be with autoimmune thyroid disease in general.
