Lost in America: A Dead-End Journey is Colby Buzzell's response to his publisher's pitch to update an American classic. Instructed to retrace Kerouac's footsteps and paint a contemporary portrait of America and to write a love letter to Kerouac, Buzzell wholeheartedly agrees and immediately cashes the advance check.

Buzzell unearths America's bones in all their beauty and starkness. And like the veterans of Hemingway's Lost Generation, he struggles to reconcile his wanderlust with his responsibilities as a man and a father. Lost in America is a stunning account of the ravages of war on one individual. It also reveals deep truths about a more universal journey: the struggle to find our place in the world--without a map.

On assignment from his publishers to reappraise On the Road in the age of Obama, Buzzell (My War: Killing Time in Iraq, 2005) admits that while he adored Kerouac as a teenager and has several copies of the book, including a first edition, after a tour in Iraq, he had lost his passion for it. More to the point, he was distracted by two personal events: his mother's terminal illness and the birth of his son.
